Our Monopoly Masters. The Democratic party was at one time the party of the people. This was when Jackson was throttling nullification and the power of the United States Bank. In later years it contracted a disease. It fell under the control of a great material interest, which, combining its power with the strength of ambitious and unscrupuous men, made it at last the enemy of politics and going to live upon it. the people. That interest was Slavery and Cotton. The slavery question asserted itself in every conven-

The Republican party was born in the struggle of the people to be emancipated from the rule of King Cotton. It was made up of that great body of citizens who had determined to circumscribe slavery and preserve the Territories and new States to free labor. It was met with insolence and violence. TEARS,

Shall I unseal the fountain of my tears, And in a show of sorrow seek relief? Reviving memories of vanished years, Displaying to the world my pent-up grief? Ah, no! there's something sacred in the pain; No eye shall see the tears unbidden start. Back, crystal drops, unto your source again; Betray no secrets of my saddened heart. Let those of transient feelings wildly mourn, But quickly all their agonles forget; My seeming coldness all the world may scorn, My pallid cheek with no soft dews be wet.

Yet there are moments when I pine O'er past remembrances, and in future fears Then gushing from this stricken heart of mine Comes the sweet sacrifice of gentle tears. I mourn my loved one, numbered with the dead, And muse on joys now gone and past, While o'er my darkened life a pall is spread-I think of happiness too great to last. I think of her who came to me with words of cheer, While in my solitude full many a tear,

Unseen by mortal eye, doth softly flow. Oh, diamond drops of passion or of care! Come not to me in the glare of day, Inviting pity's too intrusive stare, My soul's deep, mystic sorrow to betray! Come to me when day has flown, And night o'er all her sable banner rears, Come when I am weary, saddened, and alone,

And I will welcome you, sweet, gentle tears.

To the Editor of THE REPUBLICAN: Being a daily reader of your paper, I therefore know it often to be a medium for calling attention to wrongs that are practiced either through ignorance or willful disregard for the rights of others. I wish to arraign the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company upon the following: To-day an open car on Pennsylvania avenue was occupied by ladies and gentlemen and three full-grown male bipeds-I cannot say men or gentlemen-were enjoying their cigars, much to the discomfort of some ladies who sat near them. Being unwilling to remain longer in proximity to such nuisances, one of the ladies asked the conductor to stop the car and allow them to take seats more remote there-from. The conductor complied with the request, but the smokers were allowed to continue a dis-play of their want of sense or good breeding. Sucthings are too common, and due regard for the rights and comfort of its patrons should prompt said company to correct the evil.

To the Editor of THE REPUBLICAN:

The very fine portrait of the late Lawrence A. Gobright, now on exhibition in our city, brings to my mind the fact that nowhere in the many notices of that gentleman's useful and eventful career is there reference made to his love of the stage, and the other fact that he began life in his own behalf on the stage at Providence, R. I., "when a mere lad," as he expressed it to the writer a short-time before his death.
